Gather the old toys and donate them to an organization.

Are your kids already making their holiday wish list and checking it twice? This year, why not teach your little ones about the power of giving and receiving. You can try a "one-for-one" holiday wish list idea; for every item on your kid's wish list, have them donate one of their items. Then, take those items to the places you may not think of for donations. For example, daycare centers and churches/synagogues may like receiving children's books and games.

Kids make great citizen scientists as they can use their observational skills and learn about plants and animals that live near us. VISIT <https://scistarter.org/finder>. SciStarter has a great search tool where you can look for projects that need volunteers in your area. Search for stinkbugs in your back yard, head to a nearby water source and listen for frog mating calls and collect samples from your backyard to send to scientists. What a great way to learn and give back!
